 examines the impact of the 1972 immigration of 28 000 Asians expelled from Uganda looking at the impact on both the immigrants themselves and the British host community It is an attempt to understand some of the dynamics of forced migrant transition from one society and culture to another The study was largely carried out in Wandsworth and Slough and shows how these communities not without social problems before this influx of immigrants adapted to the new arrivals The sensitivity and effectiveness of the community relations organisations and the welfare agencies in these areas is revealed
