History Dominik Ohrem, 2025-11-18 Volume V covers three key areas of interaction and concern that shaped Americans' relations with wild animals. The sources in section one focus on hunting a practice that among early republicans was still associated with the savage existence of Indigenous peoples and regarded as incompatible with the agrarian virtues they deemed essential yet which eventually became emblematic of settler identity and masculinity and tangled up in the politics of race and class. The second section examines practices and sites of animal display: natural history museums, zoological gardens, and circus menageries for commercial or educational purposes, highlighting the evolution of such displays from the private collections and traveling exhibitions of the early republican and antebellum decades into significant institutions that shaped American perceptions of wild animals. A third section discusses the growing awareness of anthropogenic species extinction in U.S. society, focusing especially on the dramatic decline of the American bison and the passenger pigeon and the cultural and political responses to these losses, tracing a long nineteenth-century arc that began with opposition to the very idea of extinction and concluded with Progressive Era campaigns that managed to save the bison from the brink but amounted to too little too late for the pigeon. Animals' Defender and Zoophilist, 1892 Literary Cultures and Nineteenth-Century

Childhoods Kristine Moruzi, Michelle J. Smith, 2023-09-28 Literary Cultures and Nineteenth-Century Childhoods explores the construction of the child and the development of texts for children in the nineteenth century through the application of fresh theoretical approaches and attention to aspects of literary childhoods that have only recently begun to be illuminated. This scope enables examination of the child in canonical nineteenth-century novels by Charles Dickens, Elizabeth Gaskell, Charlotte Brontë, and Thomas Hardy alongside well-known fiction intended for young readers by George MacDonald, Christabel Coleridge, and Kate Greenaway. The century was also distinctive for the rise of the children's magazine, and this book broadens the definition of literary cultures to include magazines produced both by and for young people. The volume examines how the child and family are conceptualised, how children are positioned as readers in genres including the domestic novel, school story, Robinsonade, and fantasy fiction, how literary childhoods are written and politicised, and how childhood intersects with perceptions of animals and the natural environment. The range of chapters in this collection and the texts they consider demonstrates the variability and fluidity of literary cultures and nineteenth-century childhoods. States. Forest Service. Pacific Northwest Region,1970 Genetics and the Behavior of Domestic Animals Anna V. Kukekova,Lyudmila N. Trut,Gregory M. Acland,2013-04-22 Dog domestication involved long term genetic selection for behavior The genetics centered view of domestication is supported by experimental selection of farm foxes Vulpes vulpes that began in the 1950s Selection of foxes separately for tame and for aggressive behavior has yielded two strains with markedly different genetically determined behavioral phenotypes Tame strain foxes communicate with humans in a positive manner and are eager to establish human contact Foxes from aggressive strains are aggressive to humans and difficult to handle Although selected solely for behavior changes in physiology morphology and appearance with significant parallels to characteristics of the domestic dog were observed in tame strain Ongoing research is focused on identification of molecular genetic mechanisms associated with selection of foxes for behavior Identification of behavioral loci in the fox genome in the region which is homologous to the region in the dog genome that differentiates dogs from wolves lead to the hypothesis that domesticated behavior in dogs and foxes may have similar genetic bases
