

APPLE CULTURE.

Apple culture in Maine is a large, important and growing industry. According to the United States census, the number of apple trees in the State in 1900 was 4,184,381, while in 1890 it was 3,003,109, an increase of 1,181,272, or 39.3 per cent in 10 years. The yield in 1895 was 1,431,773 bushels, while in 1889 it was 1,071,471 bushels. Comparisons between the crops of different years are of but little significance as the quantity produced in any year is determined largely by the character of the season. The high quality of Maine apples gives them a prominent position in the markets of the world and the demand for these apples for foreign as well as domestic consumption is constantly increasing.

Some interesting information and valuable practical suggestions may be found in the communications sent to the Bureau by prominent apple growers in the State and incorporated in the article published in this report.

LABOR UNIONS.

In the report of the Bureau for 1900, was published the results of inquiries into the subject of organized labor in the State of Maine. That investigation brought out many interesting facts as to the extent, purposes, character and influence of these organizations.

The present report contains the latest information relating to the conditions and growth of labor unions, obtained mainly from the returns of their secretaries. A marked increase in the number of unions and membership has taken place during the past year. Among the inquiries made by the Bureau were those relating to hours of labor, daily wages, annual earnings of working men, trade disputes, strikes, etc., from which many interesting and important facts as to labor conditions in the State are obtained.

The legitimate province of this Bureau is statistical only, and economic conclusions to be derived from existing facts are left for others to deduce.
