

MCDONNELL DOUGLAS/BAE

AV-8B HARRIER II PLUS

• Latest Harrier variant • Air-to-air capability • Export orders

Internationally recognized as one of the most potent and versatile weapons in service, the original second-generation Harrier II was generated by its lack of radar. In the UK, British Aerospace (BAe) had produced the Sea Harrier by adding radar to the basic Harrier, a trend that has been repeated with the Harrier II Plus. With the JTF-35 radar from the F/A-18A Hornet, the Harrier II Plus has gained a formidable beyond-visual-range (BVR) capability.

Currently almost indistinguishable from the standard AV-8B, the Harrier II Plus embodies many improvements, including a new radar, new weapons and an upgraded engine.

First rebuild
Unpainted and showing the various different structural materials, the first rebuild Harrier II Plus performs a fly-by.

'Flying Tigers'
The first unit of the US Marine Corps to receive the Harrier II Plus was VMFA-352, which has deployed at the end of its tour in 1992. One of its aircraft is seen here displaying its 52 Squadron Devils during a training sortie.

European operators
Italy and Spain have purchased the latest AV-8B. Both countries employ the aircraft primarily in the air defence role.

4 Variations in colour
Different paint schemes can be seen on the Harrier II Plus. Most sport two-tone (Olive/Gray), though these two examples have much darker upper surfaces.

Reduction in orders
Originally it was hoped that the entire USMC fleet would be upgraded to Harrier II Plus standard, but defence cutbacks during the 1990s have reduced the total to 55 aircraft.

FACTS AND FIGURES

- Since the first Harrier II Plus took to the air in 1986, engine failure has resulted in one of the programme's weaknesses.
- A primary motivation for the programme was experience from the Gulf War.
- It is hoped that all of the improved AV-8Bs will be delivered by 2005.
- All the Harrier II Plus variants are to receive entirely new weapons. This is expected to be completed by the end of 1999.
- The introduction of the new aircraft has resulted in a true multi-role Harrier.
- Italy has been the first country to acquire Harriers before single-seat variants.

PROFILE

Harrier II receives an update

Already a proven dogfighter with the advanced AV-8B, the second-generation Harrier II Plus now features an all-weather fighter, with the capability to enhance its range using AV-8B, Sparrow and AGM-129 AAMRAAM radar-guided missiles. The Harrier II Plus retains the close-support capability of its predecessor, but adds an important air defence role.

These updates to Harrier II Plus are a result of the USMC's request for a new aircraft, the Harrier II Plus, to replace the original Harrier II. The first prototype flew in 1992.

Above: Another feature has been to increase the number of wing pylons from six to eight, as well as the AV-8B's aircraft. The new AV-8B's radar and AGM-129 AAMRAAM can be carried.

Left: Pilots have welcomed the introduction of the new aircraft and one, serving with VMFA-352 'Flying Tigers', went so far as to describe it as a 'fourth step' for the Harrier.

AV-8B Harrier II Plus

BAE's AV-8B2 was one of the first Harrier II Plus variants to be delivered, being built to change its radar to the 'Flying Tigers' of VMFA-352 (based in Hawaii, Canada, which has been a carrier of US Marine Corps Harrier operations since the early 1980s).

The lack of an active radar remained a weakness of the Harrier II Plus for many years. From the AV-8B2 on, the Harrier II Plus has a radar-guided missile, and this has been a major reason for its success in the air defence role.

The improvement of the Harrier II Plus has been to increase the number of wing pylons from six to eight, as well as the AV-8B's aircraft. The new AV-8B's radar and AGM-129 AAMRAAM can be carried.

The AV-8B2's radar is a major improvement over the AV-8B's radar, which was a simple radar. The AV-8B2's radar is a more sophisticated radar, which can detect and track targets at a greater range.
