Origins Of Public High Schools The:

The Origins of Public High Schools Maris Vinovskis, 1985 There has been considerable debate about the process of and the underlying motivation for the expansion of public education in nineteenth century America Interpretations which focused on the role of reformer like Horace Mann or on the demands by workers for more public education have been criticized by revisionists who see education being imposed upon an uninterested and unwilling populace by capitalists seeking to maintain a docile labor force during industrialization Here Maris A Vinovskis challenges that revisionist view employing sophisticated social science methodology in a work sure to be welcomed by all historians of American education The revisionist view of the nature of educational changes rests heavily upon the now classical study by Michael Katz of the abolition of the public high school in Beverly Massachusetts in the mid nineteenth century An especially detailed analysis of education in Beverly is made possible by the unique availability of a list of the voters who supported or opposed the public high school in 1860 Katz used this information to demonstrate that the workers strongly opposed the public high school which he claimed has been established by a small group of the leading capitalists not only to provide educational opportunities for their own children but also to help restore community harmony which was being eroded by the economic transformation of the town Vinovskis's study of the origins of the Massachusetts antebellum public high school reanalyzes the establishment of the Beverly Public High School within the broader perspective of the other educational developments occurring in that community as well as in the Commonwealth as a whole The results raise serious questions about Katz's depiction of the timing of and the reasons for the creation of that institution in Beverly This reanalysis of the vote to abolish the high school also suggests a very different interpretation of events in Beverly than the one presented by Katz By expanding the number of factors used in this study as well as employing recently developed techniques of statistical analysis the importance of the opposition of the workers to the public high school is minimized while the differences in the needs and resources among the school districts in that community become more important factors Vinovskis's reexamination does not find that the struggle over the Beverly Public High School is primarily a class conflict as suggested by Katz and other revisionists instead it reveals the complex process by which towns expanded their public school offerings and allocated scarce educational funds to elementary and high schools His work offers an important contribution to our understanding of the development of American public school education in the nineteenth century issues in American education are some of the most debated in the United States. The Institutions of American Democracy, a collection of essays by the nation's leading education scholars and professionals, is designed to inform the debate and stimulate change. In association with the Annenberg Foundation Trust at Sunnylands and the Annenberg Public Policy Center at the University of Pennsylvania, The Institutions of American Democracy is the first in a series of books commissioned to enhance public understanding of the nature and function of democratic institutions. A national advisory board including, among others, Nancy Kassebaum Baker, David Boren, John Brademas, Ellen Condliffe Lagemann, David Gergen, and Lee Hamilton will guide the vision of the project, which includes future volumes on the press and the three branches of government. Each essay in The Institutions of American Democracy addresses essential questions for policymakers, educators, and anyone committed to public education: What role should public education play in a democracy? How has that role changed through American history? Have the schools lost sight of their responsibility to teach civics and citizenship? How are current debates about education shaping the future of this democratic institution? Among the contributors are William Galston, Director of the Institute for Philosophy and Public Policy at the University of Maryland; Clarence Stone, Professor in the Department of Government and Politics at the University of Maryland, College Park, and editor of Changing Urban Education and Regime Politics; Governing Atlanta, 1946-1988; University Press of Kansas, 1998; Susan Moore Johnson, Pforzheimer Professor of Education in Learning and Teaching, Harvard University; Michael Johanek, Executive Director of K-12 Professional Development, College Board; Kathy Simon, co-executive director of the Coalition for Essential Schools and author of Moral Questions in the Classroom, Yale University Press, 2001; and Jennifer Hochschild, Professor of Government and Professor of Afro-American Studies at Harvard University and author of Facing Up to the American Dream: Race Class and the Soul of the Nation, Princeton University Press, 1995.
