1. Explore how the generic conventions have been used to represent a complex idea in the text studied.

The novella The Killer's Tears written by Anne Bondoux explores the idea of how responsibility influences change in one's attitudes and values. The writer exemplifies the concept of change through human interactions and relations. The main characters Angel, a brutal murderer, and Paolo, a young boy whose parents were murdered by Angel, find solace and develop a strong bond as they overcome difficult circumstances. As the story progresses, the interactions with minor characters strengthens the understanding between Paolo and Angel which prompts emotional change. The author expresses the journey of change in the characters through the use of language and narrative conventions like characterisation and conflict.

The author reinforces the idea of change through the use of symbolism. The utilisation of this language technique is mainly evident through the actions of Angel towards Paolo. This helps to symbolise how the responsibility and interaction has stimulated emotional change within Angel. When Paolo was lost, Angel desperately searched for him despite being hurt. Angel found Paolo nearly frozen and, "He opened his vest, wrapped Paolo in it close to his warm body, then headed back to the house..." He felt a huge relief and pride to have found the child." Angel's urgency to find Paolo before Luis symbolises how a murderer has become more caring, responsible and affectionate towards a child. Angel also decided to delay the murder of Luis and felt as if "he was accomplishing something important in the world." This places emphasis on the idea that responsibility of Paolo has made Angel more considerate and value their relation. Their interaction with each other brought slight changes in Angel's attitudes and perspective. In various situations in the book, Bondoux incorporates symbolism to display the changes Angel goes through which helps to strengthen their relation.

Furthermore, the construction of the characters is another factor that helps in consolidating the idea of change. As the story progresses, the change in Angel becomes more distinct through his dialogues and thoughts. At the beginning of the book, Angel is described as a ruthless and brutal criminal. However, the presence of Paolo, the character who was murdered by Angel, helps to change Angel's perspective. At the beginning of the book, the narrative describes how Angel was starting to believe, "Wouldn't it be better if he died, even if his death did not change all those he killed?" A criminal who could go to any extent to save himself, was starting to feel a sense remorse and empathy. The reader could recognise the difference in Angel's perspective and values. The reader can see how Angel was starting to change as he was becoming more a flawed individual. The tough nature of Angel evident at the beginning of the book was starting to fade away by the end. As Angel's perspective transformed, so did his behaviour which is reflected through his dialogues. When Paolo and Angel had a conversation about responsibility, he seemed engaged and responded calmly to Paolo's, which he would not with Luis. Therefore, Angel's characterisation revealed the small changes he had been through.
