

Evaluating Public Policies

Positive Analysis: Describes what is happening, explaining why, or predicting what will happen.

Normative Analysis: Prescribes what should happen, which involves value judgements.

Policies can be evaluated using the criteria of:

Economic Efficiency: An outcome is more economically efficient if it yields more Economic Surplus.

Equity: An outcome yields greater equity if it results in a fairer distribution of economic benefits.

Measuring Economic Surplus

Economic Surplus:
The benefit of an action,
less the cost.
 $\text{Economic surplus} =$
 $\text{Marginal benefit} - \text{Marginal cost}$

Consumer Surplus:
The economic surplus you get
from buying something.
 $\text{Consumer surplus} =$
 $\text{Marginal benefit} - \text{Price}$

Producer Surplus:
The economic surplus you get from selling something.
 $\text{Producer surplus} =$
 $\text{Price} - \text{Marginal cost}$

Market Efficiency

Efficient Outcome: The efficient outcome yields the largest possible Economic Surplus.

Markets create efficient outcomes by:

1. Efficient Production

Producing a given quantity of output at the lowest possible cost, which requires producing each good at the lowest marginal cost.

2. Efficient Allocation

Allocating goods to create the largest Economic Surplus, which requires that each good goes to the person who'll get the highest marginal benefit from it.

3. Efficient Quantity

The quantity that produces the largest possible Economic Surplus.
The Rational Rule for Markets:
Produce more of a good if its marginal benefit is greater than (or equal to) the marginal cost.

Measuring the Costs of Market Failure

Market failure: When the forces of supply and demand lead to an inefficient outcome.

Deadweight loss: How far Economic Surplus falls below the Efficient Outcome.

$\text{Deadweight loss} = \text{Economic surplus at efficient quantity} - \text{Actual economic surplus}$

Government failure: When government policies lead to worse outcomes.
