2015 Kundai Manamere draws connections between malaria epidemiology and human mobility relating to large and small scale farming labor migration colonial displacement war and rural to urban movements She examines how circular labor migration and rural travel influence the risk of malaria for individuals and communities and shows how migration and travel have spread the disease and impeded control efforts More importantly the book demonstrates that the need to travel for work is an indicator of a local hierarchy of priorities It reaffirms the urgent need for partners in malaria control to consider local socioeconomic factors in the design and implementation of intervention programs The inclusion of local contexts perspectives and voices in formulating national and global public health policies and interventions is critical to addressing public noncooperation To date biomedical studies of malaria outnumber socioeconomic and political studies of the disease Manamere advocates for a multipronged approach that goes beyond standard scientific research methods Her approach incorporates how socioeconomic considerations of recipient communities influence malaria epidemiology local perceptions of the disease and responses to interventions This context is particularly important for understanding why malaria has remained a global health challenge and why so many interventions have failed Scientifically malaria is a disease of the landscape and its ecological complexity poses challenges to its eradication Yet biological and ecological landscapes are not exclusive factors in the spread of disease as Manamere demonstrates the socioeconomic environment is equally important

Breaking the Conflict Trap World Bank, 2003-05-30 Civil war conflict is a core development issue The existence of civil war can dramatically slow a country's development process especially in low income countries which are more vulnerable to civil war conflict Conversely development can impede civil war When development succeeds countries become safer when development fails they experience a greater risk of being caught in a conflict trap Ultimately civil war is a failure of development Breaking the Conflict Trap identifies the dire consequences that civil war has on the development process and offers three main findings First civil war has adverse ripple effects that are often not taken into account by those who determine whether wars start or end Second some countries are more likely than others to experience civil war conflict and thus the risks of civil war differ considerably according to a country's characteristics including its economic stability Finally Breaking the Conflict Trap explores viable international measures that can be taken to reduce the global incidence of civil war and proposes a practical agenda for action This book should serve as a wake up call to anyone in the international community who still thinks that development and conflict are distinct issues
