preceded by The different forms of flowers on Plants of the same species 1877 See Bibliography for additional publications on plants These studies on plants were first evidenced in On the various contrivances by which British and foreign orchids are fertilised by insects 1862 the publication that immediately followed On the Origin of Species By Means of Natural Selection He co authored this study with his son Francis Darwin who specialised in botany and his devotee George Romanes who assisted in editing the work The work was begun in earnest late in 1877 after his work on climbing plants 1875 and insectivorous plants 1875 stimulated his interest in the subject At times Darwin despaired of ever finishing the work as the book outgrew his original expectations I have written a rather big book more is the pity on the movements of plants and I am now just beginning to go over the MS for the second time which is a horrid bore As the book neared completion he summarised its underlying viewpoint My MS relates to the movements of plants and I think that I have succeeded in showing that all the more important great classes of movements are due to the modification of a kind of movement common to all parts of all plants from their earliest youth The work concerns itself with how plants respond to external stimuli and examines these processes in individual plants to gain understanding of some general principles governing their growth and life This continues Darwin s work of elucidating how natural selection works and specifically how plants have adapted to differing environments whilst at the same time answering some objections of his day that evolution could not account for changes in behavioural responses In his conclusions Darwin presents the key features of plants from an evolutionary perspective indicating that gradual modification of these processes in response to natural selective forces like light and water could enable extensive ability to adapt
