Vegetation science applications for rangeland analysis and management P.T. Tueller, 2012-12-06 Natural grasslands pastures and meadows are among the vegetation types most frequently investigated with phytosociological methods This was one of the reasons why volume 13 Application of vegetation science to grassland husbandry and agriculture edited by W Krause appeared as one of the first volumes of this handbook It appeared under the chief editorship of Prof R Tiixen and in his time main emphasis of the handbook was placed on Zurich Montpelier methods and the European vegetation When we redesigned the handbook we felt the need to include other methods and aims of grassland analyses as well as a more global coverage of grasslands Especially the natural dry and semidry areas of the world needed to be covered was very fortunate in getting Prof Tueller of the University of Reno I Nevada as an editor for this volume He and the colleagues he motivated to compile volume 14 on Application of vegetation science to rangeland analysis and management have created a truly global coverage of the topics interesting for vegetation analyses in natural grasslands Since volume 13 covered the problems of anthropogenically created grasslands this topic was not expressly treated in order to avoid duplication For the same reason no specific attempt was made to get more papers from Europe and the temperate forest region in general The cooperation with Dr Tueller has been very rewarding for me

Physiological Ecology of North American Plant Communities Brain F. Chabot, 2012-12-06 Although as W D Billings notes in his chapter in this book the development of physiological ecology can be traced back to the very beginnings of the study of ecology it is clear that the modern development of this field in North America is due in the large part to the efforts of Billings alone The foundation that Billings laid in the late 1950s came from his own studies on deserts and subsequently arctic and alpine plants and also from his enormous success in instilling enthusiasm for the field in the numerous students attracted to the plant ecology program at Duke University Billings own studies provided the model for subsequent work in this field Physiological techniques normally confined to the laboratory were brought into the field to examine processes under natural environmental conditions These field studies were accompanied by experiments under controlled conditions where the relative impact of various factors could be assessed and further where genetic as opposed to environmental influences could be separated This blending of field and laboratory approaches promoted the design of experiments which were of direct relevance to understanding the distribution and abundance of plants in nature Physiological mechanisms were studied and assessed in the context of the functioning of plants under natural conditions rather than as an end in itself
