Demonstrating Respect for Rights? Great Britain. Parliament. Joint Committee on Human Rights,2009 The report opens with an affirmation that the British Government should protect the right to protest peacefully It then discusses some concerns about policing of protest which could be addressed by legal and operational changes

- 1 Reference to insulting words or behaviour should be removed from section 5 of the Public Order Act This change would allow the police to arrest people for using threatening or abusive language or behaviour but not for using insulting language or behaviour
- 2 Counter terrorism powers should never be used against peaceful protestors the Government's guidance on stop and search powers in Section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 should make this clear
- 3 The Government should protect the right to freedom of peaceful assembly around Parliament by repealing the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005
- 4 Protest around Parliament should be governed by the Public Order Act 1986 which should be amended to deal with the specific circumstances of Parliament

police and protestors need to focus on improving dialogue The police should aim for no surprises policing no surprises for the police no surprises for protestors and no surprises for protest targets Protestors should also where possible engage with the police at an early stage in their planning in order to facilitate peaceful protest Tasers should never be used against peaceful protestors
