

Infection prevention and control in healthcare settings

Healthcare facilities should apply several types of measures to minimise the risk of transmission of COVID-19.

Vulnerable people in nursing homes and other long term care facilities need to be shielded because of the large number of COVID-19 cases and deaths in this setting.

Personal protective equipment should be available and appropriately used to safeguard the healthcare workers providing care.

In areas with community transmission of COVID-19, frontline healthcare workers should wear a medical mask when caring for patients or residents during all routine activities.

In areas with community transmission, staff, visitors and patients should apply physical distancing and hand hygiene, and wear a face mask when physical distancing is not possible.

Gloves and gowns should always be changed after each patient contact.
