The process of putting together a commercial real estate buy/sell agreement continues to become more difficult. Reps and warranties have become more extensive, laborious in detail, and difficult to negotiate. Financing contingencies have become lengthy and surprisingly complex in reflection of tight commercial credit. Due diligence has become lengthier, more invasive and costlier. At every stage of the process, buyers want additional information, protection and concessions, and sellers want closing certainty. This program, led by attorneys with several decades experience in commercial real estate, will discuss the major components of commercial real estate buy/sell agreements, negotiating the operative documents and ensuring a successful closing in a difficult market.

Day 1: June 26, 2012:

- Planning the process – letters of intent, negotiations, closing process
- Due diligence depending on the type of deal – title, environmental, entitlement work, tax and finance issues
- Understanding the minefield of seller's reps and warranties
- Buyer and seller's covenants in a volatile market
- Deposits of money

Day 2: June 27, 2012:

- Issues for income producing properties, multiple family properties, and distressed properties
