Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Environmental Audit Committee,2013-01-04 The Environmental Audit Committee believes the Government s 250 million compensation scheme to help energy intensive companies with the cost of carbon must be tightened up to avoid over compensating large companies already profiting from the over allocation of EU Emissions Trading System allowances The Committee scrutinised the Government s proposal for a compensation scheme to help offset some of the future electricity price rises that energy intensive industries will face as a result of the EU Emissions Trading System and the Government s Carbon Price Floor Across Europe a large surplus of emission allowances in the EU Emissions Trading System worth 4 1 billion Euros had been accrued by large industrial companies as a result of pre recession overly optimistic forecasts of growth and fierce lobbying by heavy industry Sales of these allowances had already raised 1 8 billion Euros for these companies In the UK the Government s proposed rules do not take the value of these excess allowances into account when calculating compensation The Committee also calls for an energy intensive industries strategy as part of a wider UK manufacturing strategy to set out a path for their maximum feasible decarbonisation and help guide and support companies to reduce their dependence on fossil fuels Such a strategy should identify by how much these industries can feasibly decarbonise and improve their energy efficiency and how the Government will help to ensure that this is achieved including through energy consumption reduction measures and incentives and support for innovation
