NORTH AMERICAN INTEGRATED SERVICES DIGITAL NETWORK (ISDN) USERS' FORUM (NIUF) Gaithersburg, MD June 22-25, 1993

Report prepared by

Elizabeth B. Lennon

Computer Systems Laboratory,
National Institute of Standards and Technology,
Gaithersburg, MD 20899-0001

1. Introduction

The Computer Systems Laboratory (CSL), National Institute of Standards and Technology, hosted the eighteenth North American ISDN Users' Forum (NIUF) at its Gaithersburg, Maryland, site on June 22-25, 1993. About 230 users, implementors, and service providers of ISDN technology attended the meeting. CSL collaborated with industry in 1988 to establish the NIUF to ensure that emerging ISDN applications meet the needs of users. A Cooperative Research and Development Agreement (CRDA) with industry was established in 1991 to govern the management of the forum; as of June 1993, the CRDA has 36 signatories from industry and academia. CSL serves as chair of the forum and hosts the NIUF Secretariat. NIUF membership is open to all interested users, product providers, and service providers; meetings are held three times a year at various locations throughout North America.

2. The Development of ISDN Standards

International standards for ISDN support worldwide communications for the exchange of voice, data, and image information among users, independent of any manufacturer, service provider, or implementation technology. ISDN standards are developed by the International Telecommunication Union-Telecommunication Standardization Sector (ITU-TS) (formerly the International Telephone and Telegraph Consultative Committee [CCITT]) and, for North America in particular, by the Exchange Carriers Standards Association (ECSA) accredited standards committee, T1, under the umbrella of the American National Standards Institute (ANSI).

ISDN standards provide a broad variety of options and parameters to meet many potential needs and applications. To ensure interoperability and terminal portability within the ISDN network and its attendant equipment, a uniform subset of options and parameters must be selected for implementation. Each application usually requires only a subset of total functionality available in the standards; for ISDN products and services to work together in a multi-vendor environment, common sets of options must be selected.

To cope with this proliferation of choices and to provide interoperable products and services which will meet the needs of users, the standards specification process has been augmented to develop application profiles, implementation agreements, and conformance criteria. The NIUF addresses all of these areas.
