Preparing Students For Information Literacy School Library Programs And The Cooperative Planning Process

James Henri, Karen Bonanno

Preparing Students For Information Literacy School Library Programs And The Cooperative Planning Process:

Preparing Students for Information Literacy Barry Eshpeter, Judy Gray, Calgary Board of Education (Alberta), 1989

This report discusses the development of a school library program for Canadian schools that departs from tradition by focusing on the instructional role as the most significant work of the teacher librarian and presents a new program model paradigm. The paradigm is examined under three main headings: 1. the instructional component, 2. student information profiles, and 3. cooperative planning. The focus of the instructional component of the model is its information segment in which five phases are explored: the pre-search phase, information retrieval, information processing, information organizing, and creating, and information sharing. The report then discusses what student information profiles are, the importance of having profiles in strengthening library value by building student skills and problem-solving behaviors, and how these profiles are developed for each phase of the information instructional component. Finally, discussed is the cooperative planning and teaching function in which there is integration of information strategies and skills into the curricular programs of the classroom. Reproducible presentation masters on school library programs and the model paradigm are provided. Contains 24 references. GLR
