Crime Prevention: Why are offenders important?

- Adolescence is the most common age period for law-breaking throughout the life-span. SA has a youthful population (42.3% of the population is under the age of 19)
- The vast majority of child offenders (including sexual offenders) will not grow up to become adult offenders. It is equally important to note the damage that can be done by the criminal justice system in terms of creating or exacerbating the risk factors for offending.
- There is a very strong relationship between child victimisation and child offending. Firstly, children and young people are twice as likely to be victimised as adults. Another trend: victims of violence were significantly more likely than non-victims to become violent offenders. RAPCAN's experience.

Greenwood, 2008-09-15 One of the most astonishing aspects of juvenile crime is how little is known about the impact of the policies and programs put in place to fight it The most commonly used strategies and programs for combating juvenile delinquency problems primarily rely on intuition and fads Fortunately as a result of the promising new research documented in Changing Lives these deficiencies in our juvenile justice system might quickly be remedied Peter W Greenwood here demonstrates here that as crimes rates have fallen researchers have identified more connections between specific risk factors and criminal behavior while program developers have discovered a wide array of innovative interventions The result of all this activity he reveals has been the revelation of a few prevention models that reduce crime much more cost effectively than popular approaches such as tougher sentencing D A R E boot camps and scared straight programs Changing Lives
