Rheumatoid arthritis (chronic polyarthritis)

Rheumatoid arthritis is a chronic inflammatory disease that affects the joints. It is characterized by synovial inflammation, which leads to the formation of pannus, a thick layer of inflamed tissue that grows into the joint space. This process causes joint swelling, pain, and eventually joint destruction. The disease is more common in women than in men and typically begins between the ages of 30 and 50. It is a systemic disease, meaning it can affect other parts of the body besides the joints.

Joint inflammation accompanying psoriasis

Joint inflammation accompanying psoriasis is a condition where the joints are affected by the same inflammatory process that causes the skin lesions of psoriasis. This is known as psoriatic arthritis. It can affect the joints of the hands and feet, as well as the spine. The inflammation is typically asymmetric, meaning it affects different joints on different sides of the body. It is often associated with the formation of enthesitis, which is inflammation at the points where tendons or ligaments attach to the bone.

Ankylosing spondylitis

Ankylosing spondylitis is a chronic inflammatory disease that affects the spine and the joints of the pelvis and hips. It is characterized by the formation of bony bridges between the vertebrae, which leads to a loss of flexibility and eventually to a rigid, hunched posture. The disease is more common in men than in women and typically begins between the ages of 20 and 40. It is a systemic disease, meaning it can affect other parts of the body besides the joints.

Typical psoriasis often occurs years of suffering from ankylosing spondylitis. The mobility of the spine is seriously impaired or even completely abolished.

They include osteoarthritis, which is a degenerative disease of the joints, and rheumatoid arthritis, which is a chronic inflammatory disease. Both conditions can cause joint pain, swelling, and eventually joint destruction. They are more common in older people and typically begin between the ages of 40 and 60.
