Rhymingchild The High School Experience Told Thro:

Rhymingchild Rochelle Ninteman, 2004 Inside Out Hoboken High School, 2014-05-28 From the introduction The writing of William Shakespeare encompasses the breadth of human emotion embraces people of all social rank and warns us of the dangers hiding beneath men's smiles His are the stories of paradox so startling a contrast yet so universally true There is no better inspiration for our paradoxical tales than this Bard of Avon who is the marrow from which so many stories flow His words pour from our pens like spring showers and summer storms The stories in Inside Out examine life through this paradoxical lens Here nothing is but what is not we are not so happy yet happier we engage in battles lost and won and we discover that fair is foul and foul is fair We realize that certain conflicts cannot be ill cannot be good In our tales we find light at the end of a dark day make an enemy of a friend discover ourselves through inner turmoil and turn a bad situation into one of great reward In each of our tales we relive moments of paradox Through our writing we have given rise to expression so effective in expressing how we feel You are with us tempest tossed No need to clutch an umbrella Let it blow inside out Immerse yourself We are raining Shakespeare
