Parenting and Child Development in Nontraditional Families Michael E. Lamb, 1998-10-01 The goal of this volume is to discuss in depth the ways in which various deviations from traditional family styles affect childrearing practices and child development Each of the contributors illustrates the dynamic developmental processes that characterize parenting and child development in contexts that can be deemed nontraditional because they do not reflect the demographic characteristics of the traditional families on which social scientists have largely focused The contributors deal with the dynamics and possible effects of dual career families families with unusually involved fathers families characterized by the occurrence of divorce single parenthood remarriage poverty adoption reliance on nonparental childcare ethnic membership parents with lesbian or gay sexual orientations as well as violent and or neglectful parents By doing so the authors provide thoughtful literate and up to date accounts of a diverse array of nontraditional or traditionally understudied family types All the chapters offer answers to a common question How do these patterns of childcare affect children their experiences and their developmental processes The answers to these questions are of practical importance relevant to a growing proportion of the families and children in the United States but also have significant implications for the understanding of developmental processes in general As a result the book will be of value to basic social scientists as well as those professionals concerned with guiding and advising clients and public policy Handbook of Parenting: Being and becoming a parent Marc H. Bornstein, 2002 Despite the fact that most people become parents and everyone who has ever lived has had parents parenting remains a mystifying subject about which almost everyone has opinions but about which few people agree Striking permutations on the theme of parenting are emerging single parenthood blended families lesbian and gay parents and teen versus fifties first time moms and dads Divided into four volumes the Handbook of Parenting is concerned with different types of parents basic characteristics of parenting forces that shape parenting problems faced by parents and the practical sides of parenting Contributors have worked in different ways toward understanding all of these diverse aspects of parenting and look to the most recent research and thinking in the field to shed light on many topics every parent has wondered about Because development is too subtle dynamic and intricate to admit that parental caregiving alone determines the course and outcome of ontogeny
