Gritz, 2009-01-06 In the 21st century academic medical centers across the United States continue to make scientific breakthroughs to make improvements in patient care and to provide the most advanced information and guidance in matters affecting public health. The signs of growth are everywhere in new research buildings, new partnerships with industry, new forms of molecular medicine and new sensitivity to the role of the human spirit in healing. This growth is due in large part to the dedication and productivity of our faculty who are providing more patient care, more research, more teaching and more community service than ever before. Today there are roughly 135,000 physicians, scientists and other faculty working at approximately 125 academic medical centers around the country. Increasingly they are asked to do more with less. Since the 1990s academic medical centers in the United States have lost the financial margin they once enjoyed, thereby putting new pressures on research, education and clinical care. Medical school faculty previously given funded time for teaching and research are increasingly drafted to bring in clinical revenues to cover their salaries. Dedicated to the missions of research, teaching and care, our faculty have responded well to these challenges and perform at a very high level. However, we are beginning to see the results of ongoing stress.
