Bentwich,2012-12-06 This little book has been written at the suggestion of the Society for the Protection of Science and Learning That body was the successor of the Academic Assistance Council which was formed in 1933 by heads of British Universities and learned Societies to assist scholars and scientists and investigators who on grounds of religion political opinion or race were unable to carry on their work in their own country They were at the time of the formation of the Society particularly but not exclusively refugees from Nazi oppression and deprived of their academic posts on one of these grounds But they soon embraced refugees from other tyrannies The British example was followed by similar efforts in many countries The National and International effort initiated in 1933 on behalf of academic freedom is still far from completed For the persecution of free thought and research has become an endemic ill of our time and calls for a continuous activity of the free Universities The major task however of saving for science and scholarship the victims of Nazi persecution has been accomplished and most of the academic societies which were formed in the Thirties to take up the challenge have been dissolved It seems opportune then to place on record this effort of cultural solidarity for the displaced scholars and the contribution which has been made to the world's intellectual life by those who were rescued
