Excerpt from The Queens of Society Vol 1 of 2 Yet it is permitted to us to feel something of a kindred sensation in reading the Queens of Society of Grace and Philip Wharton For here in these pages we meet with a charming company and all like Madame de Custine's guests are women Indeed we are exceptionally fortunate for while the guests of the great French lady were limited to her contemporaries to a charming de Louvois a charming de Crenay a charming d'harville a charming de Vaubecourt we can move in a society invited from many times and can in fancy feel that we look in the same hour upon the faces of fair and witty women sundered in fact by generations Indeed we might perhaps be tempted to wish that an even wider range had been taken that more Ladies Of Old Time had been hidden to the feast that Queens of Society who reigned before the spacious Eliza bethan days might have been included But this were unmannerly this were to quarrel with our host and hostess Madame de Custine's supper parties could not entertain all her friends It is our part to accept with gratitude the company our hosts have been pleased to choose for us
