The Quest of the Silver Fleece William Edward Burghardt Du Bois,1972 The Quest of the Silver Fleece W. E. B. Du Bois,2016-10-27 Night fell The red waters of the swamp grew sinister and sullen The tall pines lost their slimness and stood in wide blurred blotches all across the way and a great shadowy bird arose wheeled and melted murmuring into the black green sky The boy wearily dropped his heavy bundle and stood still listening as the voice of crickets split the shadows and made the silence audible A tear wandered down his brown cheek They were at supper now he whispered the father and old mother away back yonder beyond the night They were far away they would never be as near as once they had been for he had stepped into the world And the cat and Old Billy ah but the world was a lonely thing so wide and tall and empty And so bare so bitter bare Somehow he had never dreamed of the world as lonely before he had fared forth to beckoning hands and luring and to the eager hum of human voices as of some great swelling music Yet now he was alone the empty night was closing all about him here in a strange land and he was afraid The bundle with his earthly treasure had hung heavy and heavier on his shoulder his little horde of money was tightly wadded in his sock and the school lay hidden somewhere far away in the shadows He wondered how far it was he looked and harkened starting at his own heartbeats and fearing more and more the long dark fingers of the night The Quest of the Silver Fleece William Edward Burghardt Du Bois,2005-07
