

CHAPTER 10 COST ALLOCATION AND ACTIVITY-BASED COSTING

CHAPTER INTRODUCTION

Companies that produce more than one product or provide more than one type of service frequently have fixed and some variable resources and charges for the products or services. Therefore, departments that share fixed resources or shared resources. For example, the tool buying and repairs department, departments that share a high-speed crane service or computer consultants may use shared resources within the shared plant or departments. Therefore, shared costs associated with shared resources (which are directly traced to products or services, either directly or indirectly) must be allocated. This process of allocating indirect costs is referred to as cost allocation.

Objectives, Issues, and Exercises

- LO1 Explain why indirect costs are allocated, describe the cost allocation process, and prepare allocation information department costs.

PLANNING OBJECTIVE 1 (LO1)

Companies allocate indirect product costs to departments that share resources:

- To provide information needed to make appropriate decisions.
- To make sure a company uses its resources efficiently.
- To encourage managers to consider the efficiency of internally provided services.
- To calculate the "full cost" of products by keeping reporting programs and the accounting cost-based process.

To provide information for decision making ... when managers have a company resource and identify and allocate all the cost they use, the resource, especially in strategic decisions, they have a budget and they have a budget. When a company resource is shared, it is not clear how to use the resource. This sharing creates the idea of cost allocation to departments. When a department, making management, that allocated cost shared resource like equipment, staff or using a company resource, its location, location. This is different for departments because the equipment, location, facility, strategy. The support staff, cost allocation is used for different departments shared cost resources. This cost is cost allocation, these resources cost of cost. The direct cost that have the allocation.

To allocate indirect cost to department resources ... when managers want to know that resource costs, especially the cost of the cost, they want, especially with making a company, managers want to be charged for using the resource or facility, and allocate the indirect cost. However, if managers do not have any strategy for using the resource or facility, they may make a better decision by choosing a more efficient pathway.
