Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor ,2005 Off the Streets Human Rights Watch (Organization),2010 In Cambodia those tasked with upholding the law often inflict some of the worst abuses Sex workers in particular know this to be true Women and girls involved in sex work face beatings rape sexual harassment extortion arbitrary arrest and detention and other abuses from officials charged with enforcing the law The perpetrators include police public park security guards and officials working in centers and offices run by the Ministry of Social Affairs Veterans and Youth Rehabilitation MOSAVY Off the Streets documents the abuses based on interviews with more than 50 sex workers and group discussions with dozens more Sex workers told Human Rights Watch that police officers beat them with their fists sticks wooden handles and batons that administer electric shocks Police officers also threatened sex workers with guns In several instances police officers raped sex workers while they were in police detention Some sex workers described being detained in government centers under horrific conditions with restricted freedom of movement experiencing or witnessing beatings or rapes and with inadequate food and medical care Crimes by officials against sex workers are almost never prosecuted The report also analyzes the impact of a 2008 Cambodian law on trafficking and sexual exploitation While the new law has some useful provisions on trafficking it criminalizes solicitation by sex workers in ways that open the door to continuing police abuse against such individuals Human Rights Watch urges the Cambodian government to end impunity by holding the perpetrators of these abuses accountable and to shut down Social Affairs centers where many of the abuses take place Donors and UN agencies should use their influence when engaging with the Cambodian government to ensure that this happens P 4 of cover
