propelled the West's rise to power in the nineteenth century and the development of computers and nuclear weapons in the twentieth century secured its global supremacy. Now at the beginning of the twenty-first century many worry that the emerging economic power of China and India spells the end of the West as a superpower. In order to understand this possibility we need to look back in time. Why has the West dominated the globe for the past two hundred years and will its power last? Describing the patterns of human history, the archaeologist and historian Ian Morris offers surprising new answers to both questions. It is not he reveals differences of race or culture or even the strivings of great individuals that explain Western dominance. It is the effects of geography on the everyday efforts of ordinary people as they deal with crises of resources, disease, migration, and climate. As geography and human ingenuity continue to interact, the world will change in astonishing ways, transforming Western rule in the process. Deeply researched and brilliantly argued, Why the West Rules for Now spans fifty thousand years of history and offers fresh insights on nearly every page. The book brings together the latest findings across disciplines from ancient history to neuroscience not only to explain why the West came to rule the world but also to predict what the future will bring in the next hundred years.

Mediterranean Connections A. Knapp, Stella Demesticha, 2016-08-25. Mediterranean Connections focuses on the origin and development of maritime transport containers from the Early Bronze through early Iron Age periods (ca. 3200-700 BC). Analysis of this category of objects broadens our understanding of ancient Mediterranean interregional connections, including the role that shipwrecks, seafaring, and coastal communities played in interaction and exchange. These containers have often been the subject of specific and detailed pottery studies but have seldom been examined in the context of connectivity and trade in the Aegean and eastern Mediterranean. This broad study considers the likely origins of these types of vessels, traces their development and spread throughout the Aegean and eastern Mediterranean as archetypal organic bulk cargo containers discusses the wider impact on Mediterranean connections transport and trade over a period of 2 500 years covering the Bronze and early Iron Ages Classical and Near Eastern archaeologists and historians as well as maritime archaeologists will find this extensively researched volume an important addition to their library Forest and Stream ,1908

Making One's Way in the World Martin Bell,2020-02-28 The book draws on the evidence of landscape archaeology palaeoenvironmental studies ethnohistory and animal tracking to address the neglected topic of how we identify and interpret past patterns of movement in the landscape It challenges the pessimism of previous generations which regarded prehistoric routes such as hollow ways as generally undatable The premise is that archaeologists tend to focus on sites while neglecting the patterns of habitual movement that made them part of living landscapes Evidence of past movement is considered in a multi scalar way from the individual footprint to the long distance path including the traces created in vegetation by animal and human movement It is argued that routes may be perpetuated over long timescales creating landscape structures which influence the activities of subsequent generations In other instances radical changes of axes of communication and landscape structures provide evidence of upheaval and social change Palaeoenvironmental and ethnohistorical evidence from the American North West coast sets the scene with evidence for the effects of burning animal movement faeces deposition and transplantation which can create readable routes along which are favoured resources Evidence from European hunter gatherer sites hints at similar practices of niche construction on a range of spatial scales On a local scale footprints help to establish axes of movement the locations of lost settlements and activity areas Wood trackways likewise provide evidence of favoured patterns of movement and past settlement location Among early farming communities alignments of burial mounds enclosure entrances and other monuments indicate axes of communication From the middle Bronze Age in Europe there is more clearly defined evidence of trackways flanked by ditches and fields Landscape scale survey and excavation enables the dating of trackways using spatial relationships with dated features and many examples indicate long term continuity of routeways Where fields flank routeways a range of methods including scientific approaches provide dates Prehistorians have often assumed that Ridgeways provided the main axes of early movement but there is little evidence for their early origins and rather better evidence for early routes crossing topography and providing connections between different environmental zones The book concludes with a case study of the Weald of South East England which demonstrates that some axes of cross topographic movement used as droveways and generally considered as early medieval can be shown to be of prehistoric origin One reason that dryland routes have proved difficult to recognise is that insufficient attention has been paid to the parts played by riverine and maritime longer distance communication It is argued that understanding the origins of the paths we use today contributes to appreciation of the distinctive qualities of landscapes Appreciation will help to bring about effective strategies for conservation of mutual benefit to people and wildlife by maintaining and enhancing corridors of connectivity between different landscape zones including fragmented nature reserves and valued places In these ways an understanding of past routeways can contribute to sustainable landscapes communities and quality of life      The Drowning of a Cornish Prehistoric Landscape Andy M. Jones,Michael J.

Allen,2023-06-01 Between 2018 and 2019 Cornwall Archaeological Unit undertook two projects at Mount s Bay Penwith The first involved the excavation of a Bronze Age barrow and the second environmental augur core sampling in Marazion Marsh Both sites lie within an area of coastal hinterland which has been subject to incursions by rising sea levels Since the Mesolithic an area of approximately 1 kilometer in extent between the current shoreline and St Michael s Mount has been lost to gradually rising sea levels With current climate change this process is likely to occur at an increasing rate Given their proximity the opportunity was taken to draw the results from the two projects together along with all available existing environmental data from the area For the first time the results from all previous palaeoenvironmental projects in the Mount s Bay area have been brought together Evidence for coastal change and sea level rise is discussed and a model for the drowning landscape presented In addition to modeling the loss of land and describing the environment over time social responses including the wider context of the Bronze Age barrow and later Bronze Age metalwork deposition in the Mount s Bay environs are considered The effects of the gradual loss of land are discussed in terms of how change is perceived its effects on community resilience and the construction of social memory and narratives of place The volume presents the potential for nationally significant environmental data to survive which demonstrates the long term effects of climate change and rising sea levels and peoples responses to these over time      Peter Pan J.M. Landscapes of Warfare Tiffany Earley-Spadoni, 2025-04-15 Landscapes of Warfare offers an in depth exploration of the Urartian empire which occupied the highlands of present day Turkey Armenia and Iran in the early first millennium BCE Lesser known than its rival the Neo Assyrian empire Urartu presents a unique case of imperial power distributed among mountain fortresses rather than centralized in cities Through spatial analysis the book demonstrates how systematic warfare driven by imperial ambitions shaped Urartian and Assyrian territories creating symbolically and materially powerful landscapes Tiffany Earley Spadoni challenges traditional views by emphasizing warfare's role in organizing ancient landscapes suggesting that Urartu's strength lay in its strategic optimization of terrain through fortified regional networks Using an interdisciplinary approach that includes GIS enabled studies and integrates archaeological historical and art historical evidence she illustrates how warfare was a generative force in structuring space and society in the ancient Middle East Landscapes of Warfare situates Urartu's developments within the broader context of regional empires providing insights into the mechanisms of warfare governance and cultural identity formation
