Text:

A novel may be defined as a long work of prose fiction comprising of characters, incidents and a plot. The word 'novel' comes from the Italian 'novella' meaning a piece of news' or 'tale', and was first applied to tales like Boccaccio's Decameron, which were very popular in the fourteenth century. Though it originated much after other genres like poetry and drama, it is one of the most popular forms of literature today.

The roots of the novel form may be traced to ancient Greece and Rome. The Greeks wrote stories called 'romances' that described tales of adventure and love. Roman examples of this form include the Latin works Satyricon (first century CE) by Gaius Petronius and Metamorphoses (also known as The Golden Ass, first century CE) by Lucius Apuleius. Other forerunners of the form are Thomas Malory's Middle English prose romance, Morte d'Arthur (published posthumously in 1485); Philip Sidney's pastoral romance, Arcadia (written in the late sixteenth century); Thomas Nashe's picaresque narrative, The Unfortunate Traveller (1594); and Miguel de Cervantes's Spanish masterpiece, Don Quixote (early seventeenth century).

Critics are divided in their opinion as to which work could be credited as being the first novel in English. Many consider Daniel Defoe's Robinson Crusoe (1719) as the first English novel. Others dismiss the claim as they feel it is not a proper novel, but just a series of episodes, as is Defoe's next work, Moll Flanders (1722). Some critics believe the distinction should go to Samuel Richardson's Pamela (1740), as it contains a well developed plot. The popularity of Pamela paved the way for other novelists. Henry Fielding, Tobias Smollett and Laurence Sterne number among the great novelists of the eighteenth century.

The popularity of the novel grew with the passing of every century. In the nineteenth century, many great novels were written by authors such as Walter Scott, Jane Austen, the Brontë sisters, George Eliot, William Makepeace Thackeray, Charles Dickens, Anthony Trollope, Thomas Hardy and Henry James, to name just a few. In the twentieth century, the novel saw tremendous changes and became a highly sophisticated art form in the hands of writers such
