Psychology; an Elementary Text-Book Hermann Ebbinghaus, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1911 edition Excerpt CHAPTER II THE SPECIAL FACTS OF CONSCIOUSNESS A THE ELEMENTS OF MENTAL LIFE 4 Sensation I The Newly Discovered Kinds of Sensations We shall discuss first the simplest facts of mental life later their complications It has often been objected that such a treatment is not in harmony with the fact that we are more familiar with the complications than with the simpler facts But we are also more familiar with our body than we are with muscle cells nerve cells and blood corpuscles and yet we do not object to beginning the study of biology by a study of the structural elements and their chief properties No one understands this to mean that the cells of various kinds existed first separately and were then combined into the body which consists of them No one should believe that the simple mental states existed separately and were then combined into those complications with which we have become familiar in everyday life Simple mental states are abstractions But we cannot hope to understand the complexity of mental life without using abstractions Through the sense organs our mind receives information about the external world The traditional classification of the sensations divided them into five groups But the distinction of five senses has been found to be insufficient At least twice as many must be distinguished When psychologists tried to explain all human knowledge in terms of experience they met with some difficulty in the description of our experience of solid bodies T 1 sjsatittD was found to be insufficient for this explanation since it informs us only of the side by side position of things that is of only two dimensions It was soon recognized that the movements of our limbs were important factors in Discovering Psychology Laura Freberg, John T. Cacioppo, 2012-04-13 In this fresh new offering to the Intro Psychology course authors John Cacioppo and Laura Freberg portray psychology as being an integrative science in two ways First they have written a text that reflects psychology's rightful place as a hub science that draws from and is cited by research in many other fields Second this text presents psychology as a unified science that seeks a complete understanding of the human mind rather than as a loosely organized set of autonomous subspecialties As psychology moves rapidly toward maturity as an integrative multidisciplinary field the introductory course offers an opportunity to teach all of psychology in one place and at one time This text reflects that evolution and the authors excitement about it Psychology Neil Carlson, 2005-03-01 This text introduces readers to the scientific approach to understanding human behaviour Each of the chapters in the book reviews the current state of knowledge about various aspects of behaviour from intelligence and emotion to child development and prejudice based on sound scientific study Psychology Robert A Baron, Michael J Kalsher, Rebecca Henry, Esq, 2007-04-16 With a strong emphasis on application without neglecting research and science this text focuses on helping students use the findings and knowledge of psychology in their own lives and careers As the only introductory psychology text written by authors with extensive business experience this book seeks the ideal balance between psychology's practical and scientific sides. It highlights psychology's scientific nature while simultaneously emphasizing its practical value: how students can actually use and apply the material they read on the job and outside of the classroom. Psychology From Science to Practice emphasizes three key goals: Make it clear to students how they can actually use the findings and knowledge of psychology in their own lives and careers; Present psychology as a science; Discuss the major findings of psychology without overwhelming students with too much detail.
