

After a long, hard day of work, the most common sight in the New York City subway is a man with a beard and a goatee, wearing a dark jacket and a white shirt, looking down at his phone. He is not alone. There are many others like him, some with tattoos, some with piercings, some with a mix of all three. They are all part of a new wave of urban warriors, a group of men who are redefining the image of a man in the city.

These men are not just about looks. They are about attitude. They are about the way they carry themselves, the way they talk, the way they live. They are about the city they live in, the city that has shaped them and that they are helping to shape in turn.

They are the new urban warriors, the men who are redefining the image of a man in the city. They are the men who are not just about looks, but about attitude, about the way they carry themselves, the way they talk, the way they live.
