

HABITUATION (PSYCHOLOGY)

Habituation is the decreased response that occurs as a result of repeated exposure to a stimulus.

DEFINITIONS

"Habituation can be defined simply as a decrement in the behavioral response during repeated presentations of the same stimulus."
(Levitan & Kaczmarek, 2002)

"Habituation is defined as the reduction in response to a repeatedly performed movement."
(Minor & Poe, 2010)

EXAMPLES

- Perfume smells: Wearing a perfume or cologne every day for several weeks to the point that you no longer notice it at all.
- Noisy neighbors: Being able to tune-out the noisy neighbors in your dorm because you are so engrossed in studying.

Psychology is the first textbook to provide a comprehensive overview of work psychology. Moving beyond the terrain of introductory industrial organizational psychology textbooks, this book examines the classic models, current theories, and contemporary issues affecting the twenty-first century worker. This text covers all aspects of the psychology of working, including topics such as safety at work, working times, work-family interaction, recovery from work, technology, job demands, and job resources, working in teams, and sickness absence. While many books in the field focus on the adverse effects of work, this one is unique in emphasizing also the positive aspects and outcomes of work, including motivation, performance, creativity, and engagement. The book also contains chapters on job-related prevention and intervention strategies, with a special focus on positive interventions and proactive techniques such as job crafting and promoting positive work behaviours. Edited by respected leaders in the field and with chapters written by a global team of experts, this is the textbook for advanced undergraduate and graduate courses focusing on work psychology.
