

An illustration of a woman in a long green dress and white stockings, standing in a doorway. She is leaning against the door frame with her right hand on the door handle and her left hand pressed against the door, as if she is trying to keep it closed. She has a determined and slightly angry expression on her face. The background is a warm, reddish-brown color, suggesting an interior setting. The overall style is reminiscent of early 20th-century book cover art.

Mrs Maxon Protests. by Anthony Hope (Classics) Anthony Hope,2016-03-07 Mrs Maxon Protests Hope has presented with his usual brilliancy a study of the false position incurred by a thoroughly good woman when she defies fundamental conventionalities Mrs Maxon s marriage is a failure so is her attempt to find satisfaction outside the marriage tie And as she exclaims If both orthodoxy and unorthodoxy go wrong what is a poor human woman to do Mr Hawkins answer to this provides an interesting examination of the complexities of the divorce and separation question and although he attempts no definite solution his discussion exploits many suggestive theories of social philosophy He touches a fundamental factor for solution when one of his characters remarks
