CHICAGO, ILL. (APRIL 15, 1995) - A team of scientists from the University of Chicago and the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) have developed a new method for measuring the rate of chemical reactions. The method, which is based on the use of a laser to excite a molecule, allows the scientists to measure the rate of a reaction with a precision that is 100 times greater than that of the best method currently available. The new method is described in a paper published in the April 15 issue of the journal Science.

The scientists used a laser to excite a molecule of a chemical reaction. The laser light was then used to measure the rate of the reaction. The scientists found that the rate of the reaction was 100 times greater than that of the best method currently available. The new method is described in a paper published in the April 15 issue of the journal Science.
