A Question of Class Duane Carr, 1996 Rednecks have long been subjects of scorn and ridicule especially in the South because of an antebellum caste and class system parts of which persist to this day In A Question of Class Carr probes the historical and sociological reasons for the descent of rednecks into poverty their inability to rise above it and their continuing subjugation to a stereotype developed by others and too often accepted by themselves Carr also records the progress in southern fiction of this negative stereotype from antebellum writers who saw rednecks as threats to the social order to post Civil War writers who lamented the lost potential of these people and urged sympathy and understanding to modern writers who reverted in some sense to Old South attitudes and finally to contemporary writers who point toward a more democratic acceptance of this much maligned group

The Intellectual in Twentieth-Century Southern Literature Tara Powell, 2012-01-09 Never in its long history has the South provided an entirely comfortable home for the intellectual In this thought provoking contribution to the field of southern studies Tara Powell considers the evolving ways that major post World War II southern writers have portrayed intellectuals from Flannery O'Connor's ironic view of interlockchuls to Gail Godwin's southerners striving to feel at home in the academic world Although Walker Percy like his fellow Catholic writer O'Connor explicitly rejected the intellectual label for himself he nonetheless introduced the modern novel of ideas to southern letters Powell shows by placing sympathetic non caricatured intellectuals at the center of his influential works North Carolinians Doris Betts and her student Tim McLaurin made their living teaching literature and creative writing in academia and Betts's fiction often includes dislocated academics while McLaurin's superb memoirs often funny frequently point up the limitations of the mind as opposed to the heart and the spirit Examining works by Ernest Gaines Alice Walker and Randall Kenan Powell traces the evolution of the black American literacy narrative from a stress on the post Emancipation conviction which saw formal education as an essential means of resisting oppression to the growing suspicion in the post civil rights era of literacy acts that may estrange educated blacks from the larger black community Powell concludes with Godwin who embraces university life in her fiction as she explores what it means to be a southern female intellectual in the modern world a world in which all those markers inscribe isolation
