Patrick Donovan, 2013-11-01 After forty-three years in the sacred space of caring for patients Dr. Donovan shares his observations and thoughts about illness and healing He believes illness serves us by acting as life's transformative process As such the journey through our illness may be precisely the very experiential journey we need to realize our healing and ourselves more fully After all we don't get cancer Cancer like any illness is a process We are the cancer we manifest Our cancer arises out of our own tissues and cellular make-up To rid ourself of our cancer is to rid ourself of a part of ourself Instead of thinking about illness as something we get something separate from ourselves needing to be removed or defeated Dr. Donovan thinks we might well do better viewing our illness as a transformational journey that must be undertaken and completed for our healing to emerge We can't get rid of ourself but we can transform ourselves and our illness provides us with that opportunity It allows us our healing From Clinic to Classroom Howard Radest, 2000-03-30 The current development of biomedical ethics is a source of radical critique not only in the clinic but also in the classroom This volume argues that today's moral education is too abstract to be effective and would benefit from the adoption of the practical approach which is typical of biomedical ethics thinking with cases In presenting this approach Radest explores various issues of moral epistemology and advocates the urgency of realism and decision in ethics The use of a rich and complex literature drawn from biomedical ethics pedagogy and philosophy serves to stimulate the reader to think through the moral complexity and ambivalence of modern experience Manners, Morals, and Medical Care Barry Silverman, Saul Adler, 2020-11-24
