

Introduction

This is the story of a road network and of the people who built it over the ages. You will not find the roads on any map, and they have never been given official numbers. However, there are many roads like them, and many that share their history.

This story is set in Western Europe, but roads were also built long ago in other parts of the world. The Royal Road of the Persians, in use from 3500 to 300 B.C., was more than 1,500 miles (2,400 kilometers) long. It was used by soldiers on the march. The road's surface was probably hard-packed soil, but one stone-surfaced section has survived in modern Turkey.

Fine roads were also built in ancient China. In 221 B.C. the Chinese emperor decreed that the roads used to carry the royal mail should be 50 paces wide. Five hundred years ago the Incas of South America also built long highways with tunnels, bridges, and causeways.

Today, major highways link cities around the world. In the United States alone there are more than 3,484,000 miles (5,607,000 kilometers) of surfaced road, used by more than 176 million motor vehicles.
