Sherman,2016-03-29 In 2013 200 million people were infected with malaria resulting in over 584 000 deaths with the potential to affect over half the world's population Such is the widespread nature of malaria that it is increasingly believed only a vaccine will lead to its eradication Although the first attempt at a vaccine was made a century ago it is only in the last 30 years that real progress in testing has been made in the hope of discovering a molecule that can provide long lasting protection against the disease In July 2015 GlaxoSmithKline GSK announced that after 30 years of research it had received the green light from the European Medicines Agency for the world's first malaria vaccine RTS S for use in African children aged 6 weeks to 17 months This book chronicles the development of RTS S done in collaboration with the Walter Reed Army Institute for Research the PATH Malaria Vaccine Initiative MVI and funded in part by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation as well as previous candidate vaccines It also focusses on the continuing quest to find more effective vaccines against this continuing health crisis Finally it provides an easily understood background on recombinant DNA and monoclonal antibodies and places them in perspective to their contributions to malaria vaccine development This book serves as a convenient and easily accessible source of information for students teachers microbiologists parasitologists physicians clinicians and research funders Microbial Lectins and Agglutinins David Mirelman,1986 Microbial lectins proteins that make it possible for microbes to adhere to surfaces have been identified as the major determinant of virulence in the infection of plants animals and humans and are involved in a wide variety of cell cell interactions This contributed volume brings together for the first time information much of it heretofore unpublished which represents the most current knowledge of the subject The book contains many illustrations and an extended table of microbial species with their associated lectins and agglutinins
