

Sphere Approach to Planning

This is where your players currently are, with the party able to travel to several locations around this locale in a session. It is the players area of effect or influence for the session. It may represent a place, a conflict, or situation that the players are currently focussed on.

Prep should be focussed on this sphere, as this is the sphere directly relating to game play. Asking your players what they plan to do next session helps define the scope of this sphere.

These are areas where the players may be able to travel to or end up in the session that are outside of the immediate sphere. Players may not end up here, as they will usually be focussed on the first sphere, but they may surprise you and head outside of that sphere.

Some prep should be done regarding this sphere, mapping out possible locations or outcomes that players may arrive yet. This sphere requires less detail and prep than the first.

This is where players may end up in a few sessions. Making some brief notes about this will help with planning, improvisation, and foreshadowing. Any prep time spent on this sphere should be brief, and not particularly detailed.

This sphere represents the wider world outside of the focus of the game. Make a few notes for flavour, and to help give context to the current situation. Very little to no prep time should be spent here.
