IN Russia, Chekhov has long occupied the leading position as a short story writer. In this country although almost entirely unknown until two or three years ago, his fame has spread so rapidly that now, in the words of the New York Times, "Chekhov is welcomed by us as perhaps the greatest of recent short story writers." Among Russian critics he is often ranked as an artist only next to Tolstoy. "Chekhov, the physician," writes A. L. Volynsky, "quietly took his seat by the bedside of a mortal sick unto death. And what marvelous art arose from the pen of this physician! He feels the pulse, listens to the heart-beat, speaks cautiously, tender words and turns round quickly to conceal from the patient the tears which tremble in his eyes, when he feels how helpless, how powerless he is to conquer the illness. These sacred tears of a kindly Russian soul." The collection of stories in this volume contains some of the best tales of Chekhov both in his serious and in his lighter vein, and affords adequate specimens of Chekhov's varied talent.
