

This book is a first attempt to explore the complex problems of Romanian etymology in English. Romanian is a Romance language, but it also incorporates all the Balkan languages represented by both Indo-European and the non-Indo-European elements from ancient civilisations. The book is divided into three parts. Part I is an appendix containing short summaries of the etymological, historical and linguistic problems of southern Europe, with a focus on Romanian and its neighbouring languages like Greek, Hungarian and Bulgarian. It contains several hypotheses regarding the region's past ethnic culture and how they developed along history. It continues with the "Roman" cultural groups, which represent the substratum of Romanian, and how their genetic material mixing with complex processes of Romanisation and finally, to complete the linguistic picture with the non-Indo-European groups that developed during the early period.

Part II, the dictionary, includes more than 3,000 entries affecting the representative vocabulary for the past and present worlds, with special attention to flora and fauna. It contains the scientific nomenclature, the scientific terminology and basic morphological and phraseological influences, as well as some etymological Romanianisms, "Romanianisms" or "Romanisms", a highly standardised literary language.

Part III includes a glossary, as well as lists of the relevant phenomena mentioned in the dictionary.

Sorin Paliga specialises in the primary civilisations, with the ancient Greek and Roman, as well as German, Polish and Hungarian. His interests are primarily focused on Central European culture and languages, mainly Greek, Slavic, and Germanic. He also is well-versed in English and is developing a collaboration with the Romanian Academy aimed at the research on the historical roots and the Romance and the Germanic influences and Slavic influences of South-Eastern Europe. He has translated books from Greek, English and French, includes the Greek etymology of foreign words mentioned in his special paper for his ability in producing Greek culture abroad.
