

The Psychology of Motivation

WHY WE DO WHAT WE DO

When you're hungry, you eat. When you're tired, you sleep. When you want a good grade, you study. But what motivates you to get from point A to point B? In other words, why do we do anything?

MOTIVATION

In its most basic sense, motivation is the need or desire to do something.¹ Understanding what motivation is defined as is completely different – and much simpler – than understanding what causes motivation.

There are several perspectives used when examining the root cause for motivation, and when taken together, they help us understand what drives us. Here are just a few of them:

1 Drive-Reduction Perspective:

Motivation arises as a result of biological needs. We are compelled to reduce a need in order to maintain our bodies' homeostasis – the balance of physiological systems.²

Example:

A rumbling stomach signals the body that we're hungry, and the need to maintain balance motivates us to eat.

2 Optimal Arousal Perspective:

We're motivated to maintain a balance between stimulation and relaxation so as to avoid boredom and stress.³

Example:

Adrenaline junkies love to skydive, but tamer individuals prefer a trip to the movies.

3 Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs Perspective:

This hierarchy is a five-tier model of human needs that is often illustrated as a pyramid. Needs lower on the pyramid – the most basic – must be satisfied before you can advance to the next level. Most psychologists recognize we can move around the pyramid pretty fluidly, but the concept of needing to meet basic needs before attaining higher-level goals is widely accepted.³

INTRINSIC VS. EXTRINSIC

It's important to note the difference between internal motivating factors and external ones, which can encourage or discourage behavior.

EXTRINSIC (EXTERNAL)

Motivation comes from the expectation of punishment or reward.¹

Completing chores to earn an allowance

Competing in sports to win trophies

Getting home by curfew to avoid being grounded

INTRINSIC (INTERNAL)

Motivation comes from finding pleasure in the activity itself.¹

Learning a new language because it's fulfilling

Painting a picture because it's relaxing

Running in order to get a runner's high

his American colleague Whether or not it was all worthwhile must be left to the reader's judgment but let me outline the rationale for embarking on this venture When the first German edition of this book appeared in 1980 it was acclaimed not only by German scholars but by those outside the German speaking community as well In fact it received extremely favorable reviews even in English language journals which is unusual for a foreign text It was recognized that this was far more than just another text book on motivation For one thing it exposed and examined the multi faceted roots that have contributed to contemporary theory and research in motivation The author skillfully examined the motivational concepts theories and research that have emanated from many areas of psychology such as learning theory social psychology personality psychoanalysis and clinical psychology
