

This is an unusual book. Its title suggests that it is a collection of essays about Donald Davidson's views on truth, meaning, and the mental. But the focus is really much more on Davidson as refracted through the lens of Ernie Lepore and Kirk Ludwig's two volumes, Davidson: Meaning, Truth, Language, and Reality (OUP 2005) and Davidson: Truth-theoretic Semantics (OUP 2007). The Lepore/Ludwig interpretation is, by my count, the direct focus of seven of the twelve papers. Moreover, the editor does not contribute an introduction to the volume, leaving the task instead to Lepore and Ludwig. The overall result is the sense of participating in an ongoing debate whose parameters are never made clear and that is taking place in something of a vacuum. We are told in the brief Preface that Lepore and Ludwig have provided "a new systematization of his philosophy of language, meaning, and thought" (vii), and Lepore and Ludwig themselves provide an overview of Davidson's work, but at no point is it explained just what Lepore and Ludwig are proposing, how it differs from standard interpretations of Davidson, and, most importantly, why getting Davidson right should matter to us.
