

Metaphors of consciousness and attention in the brain

Bernard J. Baars

Scientific metaphors have long provided heuristic tools for approaching novel problems. Today, the neurobiology of consciousness and attention is a central concern, presenting formidable conceptual and empirical challenges. Many current ideas fit the broad theme of a theater metaphor; this idea can be worked out in detail, resulting in relevant, testable hypotheses.

Trends Neurosci. (1998) 21, 58–62

METAPHORS AND ANALOGIES have a long history in scientific thought: for example, the Rutherford planetary analogy for atomic structure, the clockwork metaphor for the solar system, and Harvey's pump metaphor for the heart. A metaphor can be defined as 'the application of a word or phrase to an object or concept it does not literally denote, suggesting comparison to that object or concept'.¹ Heuristic metaphors are especially useful when the sciences encounter a topic that has no clear precedent, and this is the case with consciousness and attention. A classical metaphor for consciousness has been a 'bright spot' cast by a spotlight on the stage of a dark theater that represents the integration of multiple sensory inputs into a single conscious experience, followed by its dissemination to a vast unconscious audience. In cognitive theory, such a theater stage is called a 'global workspace',² and implies both convergence of input and divergent dissemination of the integrated content. In this century, features of the theater metaphor have been suggested by neurobiologists from Pavlov to Crick. Indeed, nearly all current hypotheses about consciousness and selective attention can be viewed as variants of this fundamental idea^{3–6}; thus, its pros and cons are worth exploring.

The bright spot metaphor was extended in 1984 by Crick: he proposed a 'searchlight of attention' metaphor for thalamocortical interaction, specified in terms of testable hypotheses at the cellular level. As Crick wrote⁷,

"What do we require of a searchlight? It should be able to sample activity in the cortex and/or the thalamus and decide "where the action is". It should then be able to intensify thalamic input to that region of the cortex, probably by making the active thalamic neurons in that region fire more rapidly than usual. It must then be able to turn off its beam, move to the next place demanding attention, and repeat the process. It seems remarkable, to say the least, that the nature of the reticular complex [of the thalamus] and the behavior of the thalamic neurons fit this requirement so neatly".

Crick derived four testable hypotheses from this metaphor and, if this was its only use it could be discarded as having done its job. However, Crick suggested that 'there may be at least two searchlights: one for the first visual area and another for all the rest.'⁷ Thalamocortical searchlights for auditory and somatosensory cortex could be included, perhaps interacting in a mutually inhibitory fashion, so that only one sensory searchlight could be turned on at any time. But humans can be aware of more than sensory inflow; inner speech and visual imagery can compete for access to consciousness. Indeed, recent evidence indicates that inner speech involves speech-production cortex and speech-perception cortex, and that visual-projection areas participate in visual imagery^{8,9}. However, humans also have conscious access to ideas that might involve prefrontal activation¹⁰. Conscious contents also influence motor output, involving prefrontal, motor and anterior cingulate cortex. Because all these cortical regions interact with corresponding thalamic nuclei, the searchlight metaphor could generate testable hypotheses about the role of consciousness and attention in all these parts of the brain^{11,12}.

But that is not all: real searchlights are guided to their targets, suggesting executive control, and are useless without an audience to whom the contents in the illuminated spot are disseminated. In the brain, the 'audience' could consist of unconscious regions, such as cerebral cortex, hippocampus, basal ganglia and amygdala, that might be activated by conscious contents. The audience for a brain searchlight could also include executive or interpreter systems, such as Gazzaniga's 'narrative interpreter' of the left hemisphere¹³, and other executive regions of prefrontal cortex might receive conscious information. Thus searchlight metaphors do not stand alone, but imply a larger framework: a surrounding 'theater'.

Cognitive models of memory have a similar set of implications: a working memory whose active items are conscious and reportable, under executive control, with an audience of memory systems to receive its contents¹⁴. 'Cognitive architectures' are large-scale simulations that have been developed since the 1950s (Refs 15–16) and have been used to model a range of behavioral tasks from chess-playing to language comprehension, memory retrieval and decision-making. Cognitive architectures resemble theaters, typically receiving input into a narrow 'stage' of working memory, interacting with a large 'audience' of semantic networks, automatic routines and memory systems. This theoretical tradition has been qualitatively related to consciousness in a framework called 'global

Valle, Rolf von Eckartsberg, 2012-12-06 As we move into the 1980s there is an increasing awareness that our civilization is going through a profound cultural transformation At the heart of this transformation lies what is often called a paradigm shift a dramatic change in the thoughts perceptions and values which form a particular vision of reality The paradigm that is now shifting comprises a large number of ideas and values that have dominated our society for several hundred years values that have been associated with various streams of Western culture among them the Scientific Revolution of the seventeenth century The Enlightenment and the Industrial Revolution They include the belief in the scientific method as the only valid approach to knowledge the split between mind and matter the view of nature as a mechanical system the view of life in society as a competitive struggle for survival and the belief in unlimited material progress to be achieved through economic and technological growth All these ideas and values are now found to be severely limited and in need of radical revision

Metaphors Dead and Alive, Sleeping and Waking Cornelia Müller, 2009-10-15 Traditional thinking on metaphors has divided them into two camps dead and alive Conventional expressions from everyday language are classified as dead while much rarer novel or poetic metaphors are alive In the 1980s new theories on the cognitive processes involved with the use of metaphor challenged these assumptions but with little empirical support Drawing on the latest research in linguistics semiotics philosophy and psychology Cornelia M ller here unveils a new approach that refutes the rigid dead alive dichotomy offering in its place a more dynamic model sleeping and waking To build this model M ller presents an overview of notions of metaphor from the classical period to the present studies in detail how metaphors function in speech text gesture and images and examines the way mixed metaphors sometimes make sense and sometimes do not This analysis leads her to conclude that metaphors may oscillate between various degrees of sleeping and waking as their status changes depending on context and intention Bridging the gap between conceptual metaphor theory and more traditional linguistic theories this book is a major advance for the field and will be vital to novices and initiates alike

Companion to Consciousness Tim Bayne, Axel Cleeremans, Patrick Wilken, 2009-06-04 Consciousness is undoubtedly one of the last remaining scientific mysteries and hence one of the greatest contemporary scientific challenges How does the brain's activity result in the rich phenomenology that characterizes our waking life Are animals conscious Why did consciousness evolve How does science proceed to answer such questions Can we define what consciousness is Can we measure it Can we use experimental results to further our understanding of disorders of consciousness such as those seen in schizophrenia delirium or altered states of consciousness These questions are at the heart of contemporary research in the domain Answering them requires a fundamentally interdisciplinary approach that engages not only philosophers but also neuroscientists and psychologists in a joint effort to develop novel approaches that reflect both the stunning recent advances in imaging methods as well as the continuing refinement of our concepts of consciousness In this light the Oxford Companion to Consciousness is the most complete authoritative survey of contemporary research on consciousness Five years in the making and including over 250 concise entries written by leaders in the field the volume covers both fundamental knowledge as well as more recent advances in this rapidly changing domain Structured as an easy to use dictionary and extensively cross referenced the Companion offers contributions from philosophy of mind to neuroscience from experimental psychology to clinical findings so reflecting the profoundly interdisciplinary nature of the domain Particular care has been taken to ensure that each of the entries is accessible to the general reader and that the overall volume represents a comprehensive snapshot of the contemporary study of consciousness The result is a unique compendium that will prove indispensable to anyone interested in consciousness from beginning students wishing to clarify a concept to professional consciousness researchers looking for the best characterization of a particular phenomenon Imagination and Experience Ingrid Vendrell to increased attention work regarding the unique character of having an experience and studies on the nature and powers of imagination The importance of imagination seems to stand in tension with the assumed unique and irreplaceable role of experience in our lives However new arguments in various philosophical debates suggest that there is a need to examine how both areas of research interrelate and can enrich one another The chapters in this volume examine whether the traditional accounts of experience and imagination need to be challenged They are divided into thematic sections that discuss epistemological ontological normative phenomenological and intersubjective questions related to experience and imagination Imagination and Experience is an essential resource for scholars and advanced students working in philosophy of mind epistemology ethics aesthetics and philosophy of psychology

Exploring Grammatical Metaphor Zhong Yang, 2025-06-30 This book explores the fascinating world of grammatical metaphor through the lens of systemic functional linguistics. It provides a valuable toolkit for understanding how grammatical metaphor can expand the potential for meaning and serve as a key resource for bridging linguistic and cultural gaps in different contexts. Grammatical metaphor is presented not merely as a linguistic feature but as a powerful tool that transforms meaning across grammatical categories. This book examines how this phenomenon of transcategorisation works, showing how it shifts and enriches the representation of meaning. Using the framework of systemic functional linguistics, the book emphasises the dynamic relationship between language systems and the texts they produce. Combining theory and practice, it investigates the wide-ranging applications of grammatical metaphor in fields such as contrastive linguistics, discourse analysis, and translation studies. Readers will discover how grammatical metaphor increases the flexibility and depth of language, enabling speakers and writers to achieve more nuanced and effective communication. This book will be essential reading for linguists, language learners, translators, and intercultural communicators. Whether you're a researcher or a practitioner, this book will inspire new ways of thinking about language and communication.
