Challenges for the Democratisation Process in Tanzania Jonas Ewald, 2013 Tanzania has been independent in 2011 for 50 years While most neighbouring states have gone through violent conflicts Tanzania has managed to implement extensive reforms without armed political conflicts Hence Tanzania is an interesting case for Peace and Development research This dissertation analyses the political development in Tanzania since the introduction of the multiparty system in 1992 with a focus on the challenges for the democratisation process in connection with the 2000 and 2005 elections The question of to what extent Tanzania had moved towards a consolidation of democracy is analysed by looking at nine different institutions of importance for democratisation grouped in four spheres the state the political civil and economic society Focus is on the development of the political society and the role of the opposition in particular The analysis is based on secondary and primary material collected between September 2000 to April 2010 The main conclusion is that even if the institutions of liberal democracy have gradually developed in practice single party rule has continued manifested in the 2005 election when the CCM won 92% of seats Despite impressive economic growth poverty remains deep and has not been substantially reduced On a theoretical level this brings the old debate between liberal and substantive democracy back to the fore Neither the economic nor the political reforms have brought about a transformation of the political and economic system resulting in the poor majority gaining substantially more political influence and improved economic conditions Hence it is argued that the interface between the economic political and administrative reforms has not been sufficiently considered in the liberal democratic tradition Liberal democracy is necessary for a democratic development but not sufficient for democracy to be consolidated For that a substantive democratic development is necessary

Not so very long ago it seemed reasonable to assert that the influence of religion on global politics was on the wane As the Western world became increasingly secular and the process of globalisation deepened it seemed inevitable on the surface at least that the voice of religion was to be heard softly if it was to be heard at all This has now changed and changed perhaps irrevocably As Jeff Haynes argues in this thought provoking and important new book various religious actors are now significantly involved in international relations and have become a crucial influence on policy in a post Westphalian world International Relations and Religion guides the reader through the complex issues at the heart of this topic with clarity and insight This updated second edition starts with a close reading of the many theoretical and analytical concepts notably Huntington and the clash of civilisations that have grown up around this area and then concludes with a summary of the issues under discussion and attempts to put into context what it means to live in a world that is increasingly shaped by a whole host of diverse religious groups Essential reading for students of International Relations and Politics State-society Relations in Uganda Jordan A. Guthrie,2008 This monograph approaches conflict in northern Uganda within its broader historical context shedding light on important dynamics of state society relations and avenues for improving contemporary approaches to conflict resolution and development in Uganda and other post colonial states By examining colonial state formation in Uganda this analysis locates the sources of contemporary conflict in the deeply entrenched problems stemming from historical deficits of state legitimacy and the concomitant realities facing leaders of weak states By bringing the state back into the analysis of conflict in Uganda important insights are gained into current debates on security neo liberal reforms governance and sustainable development in Africa Provided by publisher s webiste
