

Papwa's story is the South African equivalent of Chariots of Fire.
André Odendaal, author of The Story of an African Game

Papwa Seragulum acquired his first golf club, a roughly hewn wooden stick, when he was just seven years old and spent hours hitting an old golf ball into a tin can buried in his back yard.

From these humble beginnings the impoverished and illiterate Papwa came to dominate South African non-white golf in the 1950s and 1960s. The government's apartheid policies meant he was banned from playing in white tournaments and his remarkable talent was denied recognition. Then Graham Whit, inventor of Oil of Clay, personally flew him to Europe where Papwa won the prestigious Dutch Open in 1959 (and again in 1960 and 1964).

For a short period the South African government gave permission for him to compete with whites and despite his non-conforming, wrong arm grip, he won the Natal Open twice, on one occasion dramatically beating the great Gary Player. But Papwa was soon banned from playing in tournaments with whites. Finally moved from his home under the Group Areas Act and unable to sustain his career, died penniless as an alcoholic.

Papwa Seragulum: from Pariah to Legend juxtaposes the barefoot sportsman of the world with the wealthy and graphically brings to life the triumphs and tragedies of Papwa's extraordinary career, family life and Hindu spiritual world.

Christopher Nicholson was the first director of the Durban branch of the Legal Resources Centre and is now a judge. He is the author of Permanent Removal: Who Killed the Cuckoo Bird?
