Paradigm Lost David W. Allvin, 2000      Paradigm Lost: Rethinking Theater Airlift to Support the Army After Next, 1999 This study analyzes the theater airlift implications for the United States Army's new vision for land warfare in the 21st century the Army After Next AAN The AAN planners envision a lighter leaner and more lethal force that will rely heavily on information dominance to maximize combat effectiveness throughout the projected nonlinear battlespace This new vision requires a change in the role of theater airlift This thesis addresses the question What theater airlift capabilities will be critical to support the Army After Next and which emerging systems provide the best path to achieve such capabilities This paper provides a brief explanation of the fundamental elements of the AAN concept and their implications for future airlift From that analysis the thesis identifies four key capabilities that will be required of theater airlift at unprecedented levels 1 austere operations 2 cargo handling capability 3 situational awareness and 4 defensive systems After describing current theater airlift capabilities the paper provides some alternative paths to acquire the necessary airlift capabilities The following conclusions were among those developed through analysis Based on the data available the tilt wing concept provides the best platform to meet AAN lift airfield requirements Also austere operations will require a stand off capability for evaluating the suitability of opportune landing sites Autonomous efficient cargo handling systems embedded in the design of the aircraft will not only enhance flexibility but also increase survivability in hostile environments      AU Press, Your Air and Space Power Publisher, 2003, 2003      Air Force Journal of Logistics, 2002      Air Force journal of logistics: vol26_no1,      AU Press Publications Air University (U.S.). S. Army U.S. Army Command and Staff College, 2014-12-05 The command and control of today's intratheater airlift system as seen in doctrine and in application is complicated and conflicted As the Army continues its transformation to the modular force requirements for responsive and flexible intratheater airlift have grown In contrast existing Joint and Air Force intratheater airlift doctrine does not address these needs as seen in recent operations during Operation Iraqi Freedom Presented in this book are two historical case studies of past intratheater airlift efforts Burma during World War II and the tactical airlift system of Vietnam Both provide examples of distinct intratheater airlift command and control arrangements with similar attributes called for by Army transformation Both case studies provide lessons in the application of theater airlift to support ground forces in a nonlinear battlefield Coupled with identified failings in both doctrine and structure of the current theater distribution system this book identifies requirements of theater airlift if it is to provide effective and efficient support to the modular force With an understanding of current and past doctrine structural evolutions of intratheater airlift and the effects of each system this book concludes with recommended changes to the intratheater airlift command and control structure to meet Army requirements
