Abstract

The aim of this study is to analyse the Russian foreign policy with its theoretical background. After the collapse of Soviet Union, Russian Federation policy makers have focused on rapprochement with western countries and institutions. However, after a while, Russian oppositions-Eurasianists increased their critics to Boris Yeltsin and Andrey Kozыrev regarding the conflicts in Post-Soviet sphere -near abroad and Caucasus region in Russia. Following the critics to Yeltsin and Kozыrev, Yeltsin has taken initiative to change the foreign policy orientation by doing amendment on the constitution of Russia as well. Therefore, Russia has begun to follow an "Eurasianist" perspective with the initiative of Yevgeni Primakov, who was replacing Kozыrev as the minister of foreign affairs of Russia. Afterwards, Vladimir Putin has strengthened the "Eurasianist" character of Russian foreign when he has become prime minister and president of Russia by declaring and implementing the second military doctrine of Russia.

1. Introduction

In this study, current Eurasianist character of Russian foreign policy will be analysed by referring to the significant historical figures-philosophers in Russian history and politics as well. Unless, we don't give reference to the historical background of theory-policies, we cannot understand the logic and reasons of geopolitical stance of Russian policy makers (state) in conflicting regions and within international relations system too.

Eventually, this study will help to understand the current position of Russian foreign policy as related with the theories of international relations.

Russian foreign policy orientation-Eurasianism will be analysed by showing its various features. During the Soviet Period, Leninist -Stalinist ideology had been put on the centre of the state identity, which became the basis of foreign policy orientation as well. Mikhail Gorbachev has become the pioneer of the change on foreign policy of Soviet Union by withdrawing its military troops from Afghanistan and beginning for the disarmament talks with USA.

After the collapse of Soviet Union, Russia has left Leninist-Stalinist ideology and focused on drawing a new foreign policy perspective by approaching with the western countries and institutions. While analysing current foreign policy Russia, I will emphasize on using the arguments of Constructivists, which is perceived a kind of bridge between realists and liberals.
