Comparative Survivorship in 1,200 Myasthenia Gravis Patients in Years from Onset

VINCENT F. PERLO, ROBERT S. SCHWARZ, HENRY A. VIKTS, Boston, and KERMIT E. OSHERMAN, and
GABRIEL GINKINS, New York City

There is still controversy about whether radiation of the thymus or thymectomy is better than drug therapy alone in the treatment of myasthenia gravis. One means of clarification would be an adequate comparative evaluation of the length of survival in years from onset of the disease. This report is the combined results of such a study in more than 1,200 patients from two special clinics: Massachusetts General Hospital, going back to 1935, and Mount Sinai Hospital, to 1951. Each patient had a chart plotted over the years, from onset to present data or death, showing degree of disability and response to therapy.

Sixty percent of the patients were female, 40% male. Eighty-two thymomas were removed by surgery. In 191 patients who had thymectomy, neither gross nor microscopic signs of tumor were found. Only 30% of the patients in the thymoma thymectomy group are alive, and their survival in years is less than one-third of the average survival of all others. Eighty-five percent of the patients without thymomas who were operated on are living, compared with 76% of the entire group. The overall mortality in both groups since 1935 is 24%, whereas the rate in the nontumor thymectomy group is 15%.

The good-to-excellent results after thymectomy in nontumor cases average 65%. Survival is longer and remission significantly greater in these patients. Results were strikingly similar between clinics.

Data on benefit of radiation alone or prior to surgery in both tumor and nontumor cases will be discussed. Sex, age, duration and severity of illness, and type (ocular, bulbar, general) are important factors. Analysis of this data by the Life Table Method will be described.

The perplexing question of why the prognosis is so poor in the patient with a thymoma and myasthenia gravis even when the tumor is completely removed is still a challenge.

Myasthenia Gravis Occurring in Families

CHRISTIAN HERRMANN, JR., Los Angeles

Myasthenia gravis is generally considered to be a non-inherited and nonfamilial disorder. In a review of approximately 300 cases seen by the author in a ten-year period at the Myasthenia Gravis Clinic in the Division of Neurology at the Center for Health Sciences of the University of California in Los Angeles, 1 pair of adult siblings, 1 pair of juvenile siblings, and a father and son were found to have myasthenia gravis. Three other adults each had distant adult blood relatives with myasthenia gravis. Retinitis pigmentosa was present in 1 sibship, and in another sibship an unaffected sister had rheumatoid arteritis with positive I.E. cell preparation. The clinical features and laboratory findings, including biochemical, ergographic, histological, and immunologic studies, will be presented. A review of the literature and our findings will be discussed with related implications about newer concepts of myasthenia gravis.
