Mining Coal and Undermining Gender Jessica Smith Rolston, 2014-03-31 Though mining is an infamously masculine industry women make up 20 percent of all production crews in Wyoming's Powder River Basin the largest coal producing region in the United States How do these women fit into a working culture supposedly hostile to females This is what anthropologist Jessica Smith Rolston herself a onetime mine worker and the daughter of a miner set out to discover Her answers based on years of participant observation in four mines and extensive interviews with miners managers engineers and the families of mine employees offer a rich and surprising view of the working families that miners construct In this picture gender roles are not nearly as straightforward or as straitened as stereotypes suggest Gender is far from the primary concern of coworkers in crews Far more important

Rolston finds is protecting the safety of the entire crew and finding a way to treat each other well despite the stresses of their jobs. These miners share the burden of rotating shift work continually switching between twelve hour day and night shifts which deprives them of the daily rhythms of a typical home from morning breakfasts to bedtime stories. Rolston identifies the mine workers response to these shared challenges as a new sort of constructed kinship that both challenges and reproduces gender roles in their everyday working and family lives. Crews expectations for coworkers to treat one another like family and to adopt an agricultural work ethic tend to minimize gender differences. And yet these differences remain tenacious in the equation of masculinity with technical expertise and of femininity with household responsibilities. For Rolston such lingering areas of inequality highlight the importance of structural constraints that flout a common impulse among men and women to neutralize the significance of gender at home and in the workplace. At a time when the Appalachian region continues to dominate discussion of mining culture this book provides a very different and unexpected view of how miners live and work together and of how their lives and work reconfigure ideas of gender and kinship.

Linguistic Diversity in the South Margaret Clelland Bender, 2004. This volume brings together work by linguists and linguistic anthropologists not only on southern varieties of English but also on other languages spoken in the region. The contributors who often draw from their own involvement in language maintenance or linguistic heritage movements engage several of the fields most pressing issues as they relate to the southern speech communities: tension between linguistic scholarship and linguistic activism; discourse genres; language contact; language ideology; and the relationship between language shift, language maintenance and cultural reproduction. Acknowledging the role of immigration and settlement in shaping southern linguistic and cultural diversity the volume covers a range of Native American, African American and Euro American speech communities. One essay explores the implementation of dialect awareness programs and the ethics of the relationship between researchers and North Carolina's Lumbee and Ocracoke communities. Another essay focuses on a single Appalachian community to explore the interplay between linguistic variables commonly associated with Appalachian speech and others commonly associated with African American speech. Other essay topics include Creek language preservation efforts by the Seminole Tribe of Florida; the history of language contact and linguistic diversity in the Carolinas; and the changing relationship between English and Muskogean in Oklahoma. Also covered are the stereotypes, varied realities and language ideologies associated with Appalachian speech communities; the mobilization of dialect by Cajun English speakers for creating humor expressing solidarity and setting boundaries; and the creative use of academic and religious discursive models in the construction of Melungeon and Appalachian Scotch Irish discourses and identities.
