

1.0 Introduction to Metal Cutting

1.1 Action of Metal Cutting

What happens in Metal Cutting?

Many people compares the metal cutting action to what happens when an axe or knife splits wood. This is not a good comparison.

In cutting wood the axe knife splits the wood fibres. In metal cutting the metal is compressed and then plastically deformed as follows:

1. The tool compresses the metal ahead of the tool when the workpiece moves on the face of the cutting tool
2. The compressed metal is then sheared whereby it slips. This process is known as plastic deformation.
3. As the cutting edge moves forward, the metal is strained at the cutting edge by what is known as concentration of stress.
4. The concentration of stress at the cutting edge causes a chip shear (break by force from the workpiece)
